Derrynane House, the ancestral home of Daniel O'Connell, is now a museum dedicated to the life of statesman Daniel O'Connell and his great achievements.

Most of the original demesne landscape is now within Derrynane National Historic Park (120 hectares). The gardens contain a plant collection of great significance including endangered species from South America. The park has 1.5km of shoreline and the dunes and coastal area are of great ecological value. The area is rich in archaeological sites and the park contains an Ogham stone, cashel, souterrain, and the ruins of Ahamore Abbey.
